'The Book of Proverbs ends in a manner eminently worthy of its high standard of sanity and wisdom Without any heading it may possibly belong to the oracle that the mother of Lemuel taught her son the last 22 verses 31 10 31 constitute a single poem in praise of a worthy woman extolling especially her household virtues'
'Biblical sound and sense poetic sound patterns in Proverbs 10 29' by Thomas Patrick McCreesh is a work published in 1991, focusing on the study of sound patterns in Old Testament Hebrew poetry.

The study introduces the idea that the poetry of the Hebrew Bible does not contain meter, a notion that has been explored in various scholarly works.

In the context of Proverbs, the book emphasizes the importance of understanding poetic structures and their implications for the interpretation of biblical texts.

The study also touches upon the role of meter in classical Hebrew poetry and its absence in the Hebrew Bible, challenging traditional views on the metric nature of biblical poetry.

This work is part of a larger series focused on the study of the Old Testament, offering insights into the poetic forms and their historical and cultural significance.

References to other works and scholars are included throughout the text, providing a comprehensive view of the field of biblical poetics and its evolution over time.
apparent when it is realized that one third of the Heb Bible was actually composed in poetic form.
